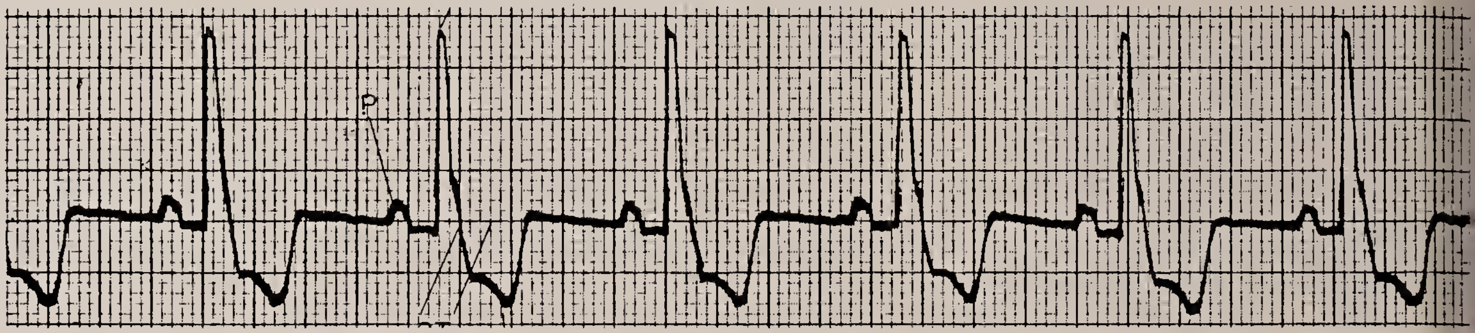
Rhythms Of C.H.S.N.

At Charity Hospital School of Nursing, we see what it means to be a nurse. We learn how skillful and astute our assessments and interventions must be. We learn how our actions can benefit or hurt others. We see, touch and feel the power that nursing has in today's health care system. Most important, we come to realize that the patient is the center of all that we are. This realization helps us to be caring and kind, and have that special touch or smile that makes nursing so unique. It is what puts CHSN at "the heart of nursing."



Seniors

The transition of becoming a senior is finalized when we rotate through an astonishing duration in Senior Med/Surg and an emotional experience in Community-Psych. Mastering such skills as reading EKG's, team leading and warm therapeutic communication has strengthened our minds and hearts to become the best nurses we can. As graduation nears, the reality of being CHSN Senior sets in as our hearts beat faster in anticipation for new beginnings.

Bones and his pals are ready for Halloween.

Yaineabebe Teklemarian uses therapeutic communication with a patient.

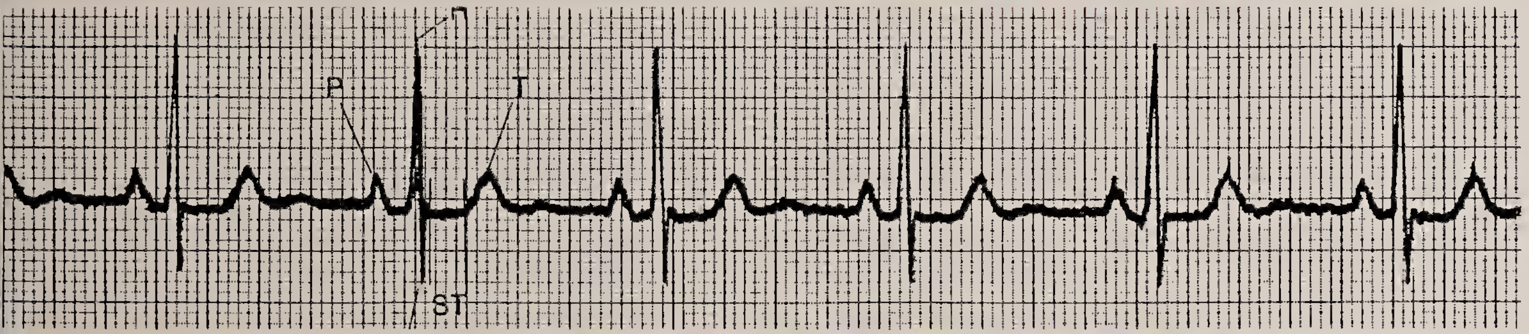
Margaret Haag, Teri Haley, and Patricia Kelly are eager to be capped Seniors.

Ray Adams prepares an IV infusion.

Judy Ake adjusts a patient's IV rate.

Joni Ibos, Malinda Schultz, and Constance Dupre do their paperwork.

Karen Medina waits for doughnut customers.



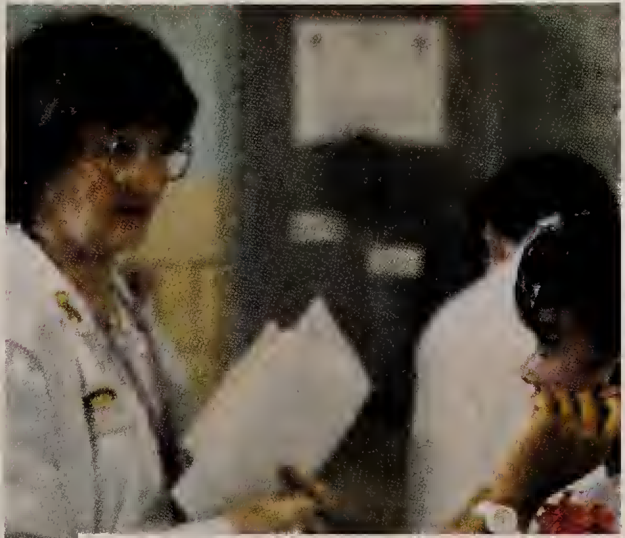
Juniors

We're between our freshman and senior years, not quite finished but not just starting. We're not as nervous about trying new skills and techniques, but we're not confident enough to be on our own yet either. Like being stuck in the dark, we await twilight and the day when we will be seniors.

Hooray for the next Junior Class.

Margaret Haag, Teri Haley, Barbara Johnson and Sheri Joshua wear that black band with pride.

Patrick Reed works those deltoids!



Erica Forstall informs Ms. Ulmer about her patient.

Freshmen

As beginning students, we are faced with the sacrifice of time, sleep, a social life, and a below normal financial status. However, knowing what's on the horizon for us as graduating seniors, propels us into dedication and determination; attributes that were once unfamiliar to ourselves.

"Hey, I got the answer to that question."

The Freshman students talk to Mrs. Branan about counseling.

Ms. Pittman sets things straight for Kendra Geraci at registration.

Kyra Fejka, Dana Desroche, and Cheri Joffary reflect the enthusiasm of being a freshman.
